The present invention relates to a method of and apparatus for the supply of only one material selected from a range of materials such as foodstuffs and wherein the material is entirely free of materials not adapted for the foodstuffs. Typical foodstuff supply systems employ a tunnel conveyor system wherein foodstuff is loaded into metering containers which are carried on the conveyor system to the point of sale. It is now sometimes the case that it is desirable to supply a single foodstuff such as a margarine which is strictly free of all other ingredients. In the past, many different foodstuffs have been stored separately in a bonded or other suitable container and then mixed on site prior to serving. However, this procedure leads to a public health problem in that the container of one type of foodstuff is opened to provide access to the remaining material, and in the case of a sudden change in taste, such a person may be serving a foodstuff which is not suited to his or her taste. Accordingly, the supply of a single foodstuff which is free of material having a different taste is difficult and can be dangerous. It would be desirable to provide a system wherein a container is charged with only the material which a customer desires at the point of sale. In the past it has been necessary to position various metering devices to fill a container from a full container of the foodstuff. This means that in a busy restaurant the supply of only one type of foodstuff may be delayed. In the case of a single foodstuff being stored in a reservoir, it is necessary to remove the item from the reservoir and then replace it in the container. This can lead to delays in the supply of a single foodstuff.

Hillary Clinton's campaign sued the Swiss bank UBS over Swiss bank secrecy laws on Monday, according to The Washington Post. The lawsuit seeks to pry loose information about millions of dollars in transactions between the Clinton Foundation and the bank. The National Security Agency broke the bank's security and later saw the transfer of funds to the Clinton Foundation, according to the newspaper. The suit also cites the bank's recent disclosure that it discovered a network of hidden computer servers used to move cash from Switzerland to a Bank of New York, located on Park Avenue. The bank was a major financial player for Clinton Foundation funding. ADVERTISEMENT Bloomberg reports the exact amount of UBS data that the NSA has seen in the transfer was $2.3 million. The New York Observer's Peter Daou has that estimate. He said the bank is claiming that the $2.3 million is just a fraction of the $6.3 million total that Clinton Foundation foreign cash was transferred to the bank. Clinton's campaign is upset that the details of the $2.3 million transfer were not made public. Because of those details, the campaign said the UBS should pay them $26.6 million in damages, the Washington Post reported. Clinton's campaign said the bank is guilty of "breach of contract, fraud and breach of their fiduciary duty," among other claims. "The Clinton's global Foundation has received tens of millions from UBS, which has a history of providing banking services to the world's worst dictators," Clinton's spokesman Hari Sevugan said in a statement to The Hill. ♦ 1cdb36666d
